At WComp, our goal is to create financial infrastructure that applications and developers can rely on, forever. To get there, we intend to fully decentralize the WComp protocol — removing the largest single point of failure (our team), and creating an indestructible, open protocol that can evolve in entirely new ways.

Decentralization Process

- The transition to community governance will be managed with a relentless focus on security & stability, and will follow the principle of increasing decentralization.
- During an initial sandbox period, a portion of the governance tokens will be distributed amongst our company's shareholders, who can delegate voting weight to themselves or the public as they see fit; the majority of WCOMP will be escrowed, and will not participate in governance.
- Developers building on top of WComp are encouraged to actively participate in governance, which will be tested in the open. As a failsafe, our team will have the ability to suspend the governance system (though not the protocol's 2-day timelock) during the sandbox.
- When the governance system is operating in a reliable, distributed manner, we'll suggest that the failsafe be removed — and that the remaining tokens be distributed to Compound protocol users. We'll be releasing more details of this plan in the coming months — stay tuned!

WCOMP

- The legacy financial system is slow, inefficient, and constrained by intermediaries.
- We're on a mission to change that.
- Compound Labs is an open-source software development company building tools, products, and services for the decentralized finance (DeFi) ecosystem.
